

'...the words that have gripped me, yet have freed me...'*

An installation with five video works, a sound piece and a lemon tree exhibited for the first time at the Slade Graduate Show, 2015

This exhibition will be accompanied by a live reading on 21 June at 12pm

We begin our life in our grandmother's egg, she said. Our only part that ages is the heart. All the tissues in our bodies regenerate numerous times in our lives, while the heart cells stay the same throughout. It is the reason why we age. They beat day in day out, all day and all night long so we can stay alive

The narration currently exhibited quotes from:

Jacques Derrida – The animal that therefore I am

Thom van Dooren – The Last Snail: Loss, Hope, and Care for the Future in Anna-Sophie Springer and Etienne Turpin, (eds.). intercalations 2: Land & Animal & Nonanimal

Tim Steer – Some notes on Desire and Repetition in Moving Image, Part 3

Anna Citelli and Raoul Bretzel – Capsula Mundi.it

* The title is taken from the book Pure Means (p.40) by Yve Lomax, used with permission

Olga Koroleva © 2015